Bill Ebert has master's degree in history from Rutgers University, Specialization in Social History. In June of 2024, Bil retired from my career as a high school history teacher. Bill's area of specialization was Twentieth Century U.S. History and Holocaust and Genocide. During his tenure as a high school teacher, Bill was awarded five National Endowment for the Humanities. These were week-long immersive master's courses on focused topics, including one on-site at Ellis Island. Concurrently, Bill was an adjunct with Camden County College as a professor for The Center for Civic Leadership and Responsibility. In that position, Bill taught wide-ranging social history courses to adults on topics such as the evolution of graffiti, the relationship of social dance to social movements, man's historical relationship to the food he eats, and others. Bill looks forward to sharing his education and research with the Sun City Community.
